3. There was no shortage of any goods in Rumania. On the contrary, goods were accumulating in shops because people did not have enough money to buy them. The only items sold against coupons in Bucharest were black bread and sugar. Black bread was sold for four lei a kilo against coupons in order to prevent peasants and other citizens from outside communities from buying the bread and thus causing a shortage for inhabitants of the city. White bread could be bought freely at 4.60 lei per kilo. Sugar was the only rationed item. It cost nine lei per kilogram and the allowance was one-half a kilogram per person per month. Wages had not been increased, while prices had slightly risen.
